returned home, Mr. Cane had a long sanitarium and plans were perfected to have him meet all the patients when the doctor made his rounds next day. He wished to establish friendly relations with the woman who had caused such a stir in the community That she was Dr. Ellson's divorced wife he knew, and he was almost equally certain that she was the one who had kidnaped the baby from the Doclawn the Monday before. How could he prove it, and restore the baby to its frantic parents? That was the question that occupied his every waking moment. The superintendent assured him that Mary Ogden as hhe called herself was a very difficult person to approach. She never talked with the other patients; never unbent for a moment, or forgot the cold reserve that separated her from everybody, nurses, doctors and at-Her glittering black eyes seemed always suspiciously watching everyone, and her scornful reshowed that she trusted none. he hired to watch her and no one else On Monday the attendant reported that she had left her room and was walking down through the fields to-ward the woods. After waiting till she was some little distance off he sauntered out onto the lawn and began to talk to the man who was mowing the lawn, keeping an eye on the figure of the woman moving through the field toward the woods. She had not looked back or appeared to be watching the buildings in any way and he thought it safe to stroll in her direction by a circuitous route. Hardly had he started however, when she began to make a circle toward one of the workmen in the field to whom she spoke and then turned to-Cane strolled on down the road apparently unconscious of her existence.

He followed the line fence till he on the other side began to search for signs of a path or a break in the visit. Known to her friends as the "Camera Girl," Miss Grace Spurgeon of New York City, recently returned to the United States from a tour of the South Sea Islands. bringing with her what she believes to be a new secret in color plate making, discovered in the color riots of the Hawaiian Islands.

She gained the name of "Camera Girl" from her tireless experiments with new phases of photography, including the color ideas. In travels to various odd places over the world, she has taken hundreds of rare pictures. She went to Hawaii especially to study color photography, because of the variety of brilliant hues there.

In Japan, she said, she was astounded to find that the Japanese artists color a photograph by hand correctly and in beautiful work and charge only two cents for it. This is cheaper than any color plate yet invented can do the work. Japanese artist works a half a day for the insignificant sum.
